LODGE CANDIDACY GIVES CHIEF ISSUE IN STATE ELECTION

Dry Code and Film Censorship Also Present Compelling Demands to Voters

With several issues of importance submitted for their decision, and with elective offices to fill from United States Senator to Register of Deeds, Massachusetts voters will go to the polls tomorrow for the biennia! state

The balloting follows a dull campaign. Colorless platforms adopted by both major parties accentuated this condition and only in the closing days of the campaign has awakened interest been observed.

There are certain outstanding matters on which the voters will register their will. In point of candidates, the contest surrounding the re-election of Henry Cabot Lodge to the United States Senate, and the candidacy of Joseph C. Pelletier for district attor-ney of Suffolk County, from which office he was removed for misfeasance, malfeasance and nonleasance, arouse the greatest interest. This interest is not confined to Massachusetts because Mr. Lodge is a world figure, and the Pelletier candidacy involves democratic fundamentals.

Of Widespread Concern

Issues are presented to the voters through several referenda. The outcome of at least two of these-a state prohibition enforcement code and a law setting up a political censorship of motion pictures — are being watched, as well, from without the borders of Massachusetts.

In the contest for United States Senator there are five candidates. Mr. Lodge, with the Republican standard,

In his campaign Mr. Lodge has stood on the record of the Republican tration and Mr. Gaston has centered his assault on the Fordney-McCumber tariff. There has been some defection from the Lodge ranks on this issue and some on the League of Nations issue, although League Republicans are believed to be offset by anti-League Democrats. The largest defection is expected on the prohibition issue, and it is anticipated that the vote cast for Mr. Nicholls, who

Two Congressional Contests

In the congressional districts there are two outstanding contests. In the Seventh District William P. Connery Jr. of Lynn is making an active contest to recapture for the Democrats the seat for which Frederick Butler of Lawrence is the Republican candidate In the Sixteenth District local issues promise a close contest between Charles L. Gifford of Barnstable, Republican, and Judge James P. Doran of New Bedford, Democrat.

Wright, former United States statistician, whose economic research resulted in his finding that: "For every dollar that the saloons pay in license, they cost the people of this nation $21 to support them and care for their products."

Anti-Saloon League officials also point out, in asking a "Yes" vote at the Massachusetts polls tomorrow on Referendum No. 4, the State Prohibition Enforcement Act, that every dollar appropriated by the Federal Government for enforcement of pro-hibition has brought in $2.50 in fines and forfeltures.

TURKS NOT TO ALLOW WARSHIPS IN STRAITS WITHOUT PERMISSION

GREAT BRITAIN INTENDS TO UPHOLD MUDANIA ARMISTICE AGREEMENT

Under No Circumstances Will British Point of View Regarding Constantinople Be Changed-Lausanne Peace Conference Postponed

By a sudden thrust during the week-end the Angora Turks have broken the tranquillity of the Near East, set the chancelleries of Europe again into great activity and cast such a shadow over the Lausanne Peace Conference that it has had to be postponed to a future date. They have taken over the administration of Constantinople, ordered the Allies out, notified the high commissioners that only by the Nationalists' permission may troops be landed or warships pass through the Straits and decided to replace the teaching of French by the teaching of Turkish in the schools of Anatolia. They have scrapped the Mudania convention and marched on Chanak. Events have moved so swiftly that allied action has yet to be determined, but it is stated in authoritative circles that the British intend to uphold the armistice agreement and remain in the neutral zone. Not only have the Turks set the powers at defiance but they have aroused the ire of the Moslems in India by reserving to themselves the right to name the successor to the Caliph. How their action will be received by the Muhammadan of northern Africa and the states that stretch from the Mediterranean Sea to the Persian Gulf is a matter for conjecture, but it is known that fellaheen of Egypt have shown little response to the Kemalist propaganda and elsewhere the Nationalist cause is now on the wane.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 6 (By The Associated Press)-The Turkish Nationalist Government has handed a note to the allied high contrary to those of Islam, and that the Kemalist action would strike at the roots of Islam.

CALCUTTA, Sept. 30 (Special Correspondence)—The subject of the Kemalist advance to the Ægean Sea and the nature of the peace terms to be arranged with Turkey naturally prompted a resolution in the Legislative Assembly. This resolution was, however, withdrawn on the Viceroy agreeing to receive a deputation of 25 Moslem members of the Indian legislatures.

They are advancing into the Channak area, where only a few weeks ago the British dug themselves in to prevent violation of the neutrality of that district. At Burgas, a few miles from the Dardanelles, the Kemalists have established an administration.

New Régime Accepted

The Turkish populace in Stamboul and in other quarters of the Sublime Porte has for two days and two nights been celebrating the change in gov-ernment. At one time the demonstrations became so wild and so po-tentially dangerous that allied soldiers had to fire upon the mobs to dispel them. Several Turks were killed by these shots.

The celebrations were touched off Saturday night by Rafet Pasha just after he had conferred with the allied high commissioners and military leaders over the advisability of transferring the civil power to the Angora representatives. Speaking from a balcony to a crowd of several thousand, he declared that the hour of the liberation of the captive capital had arrived. He warned them to deport moment on a great many of them did On the other hand, if the wets make

But the new Governor of the city told the people their support of the Angora Government had made possible a bloodless revolution. Only a little while after the courts had closed, following the assumption of control by the Kemalists, they were opened again.

Issue Was Discussed

A number of the Christian whites called a number of the Christian col-ored men in to discuss the matter. The colored men to discuss the natter. The colored men were amazed. It was the first time they had ever been given a hearing, and they told freely of their wishes. It was discovered that the immediate cause of the riot scare was the desire of the colored people for a high school and a playground. They now

They have come off well in the uncontested constituencies. The Labor ment at home and solidarity with Great Britain's French and other allies abroad, sounds in the ears of the overburdened taxpayers, who feel the weight of Mr. Lloyd George's housing and social service schemes at home, and have been scared by his spread eagleism abroad. It is true that Mr. Bonar Law himself has much to answer for in the way of past complicity with the very deeds he now deplores. He is also handicapped by a diehard wing-which prevents his clearing his party of malfeasance charges of protection and imperialism.

It is to attend to business and put an end to "alarms and excursions abroad and incessant legislation at home." Mr. Bonar Law's candidates are now busy throughout the country, explaining why what happened in 1874 is bound to be re-peated in 1922. The Asquithians, Lloyd Georgians and Laborites are as busy declaring the contrary.

These neutral zones are definitely described as "new," from which it may be presumed that the old zones as defined in the Treaty of Sèvres are deemed to be superseded. The European neutral zones, on the other hand, are exactly specified by the determination of their frontiers. The termination of their frontiers. The zone on the European side of the Dardanelles comprises the whole of the Gallipoli peninsula, and the boun-dary on the European side of the Bosstantinople peninsula at an average distance of about 50 miles from the latter city.

> > Modified Sevres Treaty

The permanence of these zones is not insisted upon, nor on the other hand, is there any definite undertaking as to their evacuation. On this point the convention states: "Until the withdrawal of the allied troops and the cessation of the occupation of each In effect, therefore, the terms of the convention contemplate the continu-ance for the present, and presumably pending the peace conference, of a slightly modified form of the Zone of the Straits established by the Treaty of Sevres. Should this modified area become permanent, it will mean that on both shores of the Bosporus and the Dardanelles a strip of territory native coadjutors against Mr. Bonar the Dardanelles a strip of territory Law's Conservatives, who are now far will be held by an international force. The position of such a force would be extremely delicate should a further threat of hostilities arise. It would occupy four detached posts, depending for inter-communication upon the waterways of the Straits themselves. While such a force would be in a posi-tion to be able to deny the use of the setback in the municipalities has Straits to its enemies, it would be helped them. Turning from the freedom of the Straits to the occupation of Thrace, the first thing that strikes one in the terms of the convention is that no limit is assigned to the ultimate occupation of that country by the Turks. The reason of this is undoubtedly that such a limit is beyond the jurisdiction of a purely military convention, and is the statesmen of the peace conference The responsibility of his position But, nevertheless, the lack of definition leaves a loophole for further able to make a serious bid for power ings of the peace conference cannot without outside help, while it recompiration of the time limit for the evac uation of Thrace by the allied missions and contingents. There is nothing in the convention dealing with the extent of territory to be surrendered by the Greeks or to be included in the process of handing over. Doubtless there will be further agreement on this point, which is really one for the Greeks and Turks to agree upon, subject to the approval of the nations of

STATE REFERENDA DEMAND INTELLIGENT BALLOT STUDY

Decisions in Tomorrow's Election Should Justify Law. Making Voters Final Legislative Authority

State, censorship of motion pictures, and definition of the qualifications of a district attorney are the three paramount questions submitted to the voters of Massachusetts in referenda which will appear on the State ballot tomorrow. On the other hand, it is a fundamental of democratic constitutional government that legislators shall be recorded. The majority of the measures which carry emergency preambles are important. There is a considerable body of opinion which holds that members of the General Court shall be recorded on every important piece of legislation, and that the saving of time which might be realized by this change does not compensate for the cession of democratic policy.

The second referendum is on a law which provides that voluntary asso tions may sue and be sued in their common name. This act is supported by manufacturers and other industrial organizations. It is opposed by organized labor. It is urged by its pro-ponents on the ground that it establishes by law a liability which should apply to voluntary associations. Continuing, Mr. Haynes said:

Granting that at this early day after the enactment of this legislation, enforcement of the prohibition law is difficult, and that many complications arise out of efforts to enforce this new law; granting that pootlegging in these early days of this law's enforcement, in certain sections, has become a natural consequence, and that some criminals have profited from the industry; granting that men who are breaking no other laws, somehow find it easy to quiet their consciences in breaking the law against the drink traffic, and even to joke about it—granting all of these things, yet it is easy to demonstrate that prohibition is showing itself as a means of pronounced public betterment; that since the policy was adopted great numbers of men have improved in conduct; that the families of small wage earners are living more comfortably. Shall a law (Chapter 427 of the Acts of 1922) enacted to enforce in Massa-chusetts the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, the Constitution of the United States, which provides that except as authorized by the act, the manufacture, sale, barter, transportation, importation, exportation, delivery, furnishing or possessing of any intoxicating liquor, as defined in the act, shall be a criminal offense and be punished in the manner prescribed by the act, which law was passed in the House of Representatives by a majority of 134 in the affirmative to 68 in the negative, and in the Senate by a majority of 28 in the affirmative to 9 in the negative, and was

No doubt, however, the most significant contest is that for district attor-ney of Suffolk County. Mr. Pelletier is seeking to recapture the office in which, the court found, he practiced "official corruption." He has the Democratic nomination and is op-posed by Thomas C. O'Brien, the present district attorney and Repub-lican nominee.

Party lines do not count seriously in this contest. The issue is honesty and impartial administration of public service. Within the last few days there has been noted a decided swing toward Mr. O'Brien. This tendency is believed to be due to an awakening to the fundamental issue at stake, and to the realization that Mr. Pelletier will never sit in the office. -

"I am rather curious to know just how many citizens of Massachusetts will forget to vote on the various referenda at the polis next Tuesday—especially on Referendum No. 4, the prohibition enforcement code," said Ernest H. Cherrington, secretary of the World League Against Alcoholism, who visited Boston recently. "I feel that the danger is not that a mismformed people will vote against the enforcement of the Constitution, but that an absent-minded citizenry failing in their duty will forget to vote on the question at all."

Dr. Cherrington, who is also manager of the American Issue Publishing Company, the printing branch of the Anti-Saloon League of America, at Westerville, O., came to Boston in connection with arrangements for the approaching convention of the World League in Toronto, Canada.

In discussing the referendum issue of tomorrow, he said:

It is pointed out by Mr. Rourke that while there is no desire to "drive" the laborers it is the duty of the city to its citizens to place men where they can render the most efficient service. The Veterans' Civil Service Act, certain city officials declare, is lowering the standard of municipalities, owing largely to the thoughtlessness of those men who come under its provisions and who have failed to appreciate the fact that the better the service ren-

After Being Closed Six Months Popular Motor Highway Is Again in Use

NEWBURYPORT, Mass., Nov. 6-(Special)-The Newburyport turnpike was reopened to travel over its entire length yesterday, for the first time in six months. The work of resurfacing the roadbed has been completed over a stretch of about 11 miles between this city and Topsfield. Some of the minor work remains to be cleaned up, but these details will be easily completed before Dec. 1, the date set for the completion of the road contract. The contract involves an expenditure of approximately $900,000, and is the largest individual job that has ever before been attempted in this county.

The reopening of the road marks an epoch in the history of the turnpike, one of the most notable roads in the country. The road has been open to travel for more than a century and for many years was the main thoroughfare to points east of Boston. It was then known as the stage route from Boston to points east. In the last few years it has become one of the popular automobile thoroughfares. It affords the shortest and quickest route between Boston and Newburyport, a distance of about 25 miles and is almost a straight road.

The history of the road is interest-The history of the road is interesting. It was authorized by the General Court March 8, 1803. The legislative authority was granted to "Micajah Sawyer, William Coombs, Nicholol Pike, Arnold Wells, William Bartlett, John Pettingell, William Smith, John Codman and James Prince, and all such persons as are or shall be associated with them, under the name of the Newburyport Turnpike Corporation," to lay out and build a turnpike road four rods wide, from the head of State Street in Newburyport "in as nearly a straight line as possible to Chelsea bridge," with liberty to erect | turnpike gates and establish tolls for the use of the same..

In the following August work on the roadbed was begun, and the cut 10 feet deep made through the highlands owned by Moses Brown, oppo-site the head of State Street, Newburyport. Deep hollows were filled with gravel taken from this excavation, and a solid and substantial causeway built over the marsh known

Although the work was pushed as rapidly as possible, the turnpike required three years in building, being completed in 1806. It cost, with the toll houses, bridges, and two hotels—one at Topsfield and one at Lynnfield -nearly $500,000, slightly more than half what the present modern road has entailed in expenditure.

For many years the Eastern stage company paid from $800 to $1000 annually for the privilege of running its stages, post chaises and wagons over the road, but travelers by private con-veyance found the old route through Rowley, Ipswich and Salem, though longer, more convenient and attrac-tive. As a result, after deducting from the gross income the cost of annual repairs and the salaries of gatekeepers, only a small balance remained divided annually among the

A few years later the toll gates were abandoned and the toll houses sold. As a matter of convenience to travelers the county commissioners took over a section of the turnpike from Newburyport to Rowley and established a public highway. This control by the county authorities was later extended over the entire stretch of

FRENCHMAN FAVORS CONSTRUCTION IDEA

French, German, and Belgian Socialists, by recommending the reconstruction of the devastated areas of France with German materials and technicians and French labor, have proposed the only practical solution of the German reparations problem, declared Jean Longuet, former Socialist member of the French Chamber of Deputies, and now editor of Le Populaire at the Old South Forum, Boston yesterday afternoon.

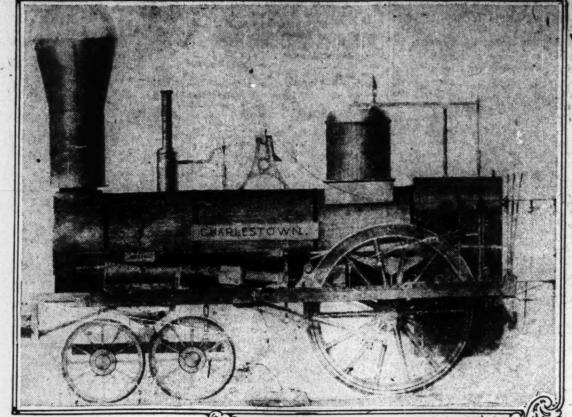

Socialists throughout the world have fought for maintenance of peace and abolishment of war, said M. Longuet. He expressed considerable faith in the future of the League of Nations, but maintained that it should be composed of representatives of the people them-selves and not be a league of governments. It would be nothing but a "weakling," he said, while the United States, Germany, Russia, and Turkey remained out.

In answer to a question regarding the allied nations and the Turks, M. Longuet replied that the situation in the Near East was the result of the Allies' terms which had practically denied the Turks the right to live. France had no desire to enter into a new war with the Turks.

For economic reasons he thought the French Government would soon recognize the Bolshevist Government of Russia, but he said Socialists would never receive their orders from Moscow. Attempted interference, he said, had cost the Communist Party half its membership in France in a year

Boston Exhibition Unfolds the Story of the Locomotive

CTEAM locomotives in lithograph, poster, photograph and diagram, railroad time tables, excursion notices, tickets and baggage checks, covering the story of the railroad in the United States and particularly in New England, are now being shown at the Boston Public Library. The exhibition has been arranged by the Railway and Locomotive Historical Society, with John W. Merrill of Cambridge, Mass., a director, in charge. The pictures of locomotives are largely from his collection.

One story runs like a thread throughout the exhibition—the development of the locomotive. First come photographs of the earliest pump engines and steam carriages preserved in museums in Eng-and France. Next are the now land and France. Next are the early American locomotives; the first one built in America to run on rails being Tom Thumb, Peter Cooper's achievement of 1829, although Salem Reed of Salem, Mass., had designed and built a steam-driven carriage in 1790 and run it on the rally given them, balloon. This type was in common use until after the runblic highway. Many of the early public highway. Many of the early locomotives, however, such as the famous Dewitt Clinton of the New York Central Railroad, which first ran between Albany and Schenectady, were imported from England. There is a large colored lithograph of this locomotive in the exhibition.

Aims and Methods Coincide Though West Holds Its Pupils Longer

East and west are drawing together with such a sense of unity, that education in one part of the United States Welfare Society Cites Records in varies but little from that in the other, declares Dr. Payson Smith, commissioner of education in Massachusetts who has just returned from a tour of western cities that carried him to the Pacific coast. Both are working definitely to definite ends and problems of the one are, broadly speaking, problems of the other. The people at the west may, perhaps, be somewhat more generous in their financial support of education, Dr. Smith found, t in all respects of essential characteristics, the east has not lost her prestige and Massachusetts has by no means fallen behind.

The efficiency of a teaching system is tested at one point, and that is the teacher's desk, says Dr. Smith. From the above figures it is evident that there has been a great decrease in the percentage of families affected by intemperance. There has, the workers say, been a slight increase over last year. hTe quality of the liquor is bad and its effects are more quickly shown and are more deadly than formerly.

One factor contributing to this an parent increase was the very prevalent industrial depression, when a great many men were thrown out of work. The workers say that the tendency is always decidedly marked that unemployed men take to drink. The workers further say that if prohibition can show a marked falling off for drunkenness, it certainly deserves to be con-tinued until something like a case can be shown against it.

The report of that commission, made after careful consideration, pro-165 chapters with receipts of $11,853 poses that the present state board of administration control over educational institutions be terminated. It. also proposes that the schools be placed in charge of a board of seven regents, who should serve without pay, and who would arrange the details of the scholastic program.

The special commission was com posed of G. E. Zook of the United States Bureau of Education; Dr. L. D. exhaustive study of the Kansas school system.

The report would have the State provide for a sort of superchancellor of education—a man of scholarly ating season which has just closed, 225 tainments—who should be the super vising head of all the higher educa-tional work of the State. Each school would have its own chancellor or president to handle local matters. The heads of the institutions, the superchancellor and the regents would be relieved of all business cares. A separate business manager for the university, one for the agricultural college and one for normal schools, is believed advisable by those who made the survey, which was most complete. Many changes are urged in the handling of the work of duplications in school activities, and a broadening out of certain courses best to fit the needs of Kansas students.

Braslau and De Gogorza

Yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall Sophie Brasiau and Emilio de Gogorza shared the program of the second Steinert Concert. Miss Brasiau sang a seventeenth century air and one by Handel; four songs by Schubert and lighter pieces by American and English composers. Mr. De Go-gorza sang an aria by Handel, one by Gluck; songs by Griffes, Aubert, Capuis, Huhn and De Falla, and Span-

New York's Autumn Salon Proves Itself Eclectic

Special from Monitor Bureau NEW YORK, Oct, 30-There is always much anticipation over the first big shows of the season; they start the ball rolling and bring everyone together again. New York was promised last spring that it was to have its own autumn salon and, if all went well, a spring one, too. Therefore, a good deal was expected of this first exhibition, which is comfortably installed in the three large Anderson Galleries; for, under the leadership of Hamilton Easter Field, the salons of America came into being as a pro-test against certain limitations of the "Independents," promising a greater freedom to exhibitors than ever before. A very eclectic group of artists from all points of the compass have paid their modest dues, and a very successful hanging committee has brought out a most harmonious arrangement of their contributions. Black Hills Dispute and Every Pending Contract Up for Final Settlement by Government

PIERRE, S. D., Nov. 1 (Special Correspondence)—The recent meeting held in this city by Charles H. Burke, following, among other special Indian commissioner, which was attended by the superintendents of all points:
To persuade societies to avail themselves of the teaching of the Government's experts.

The main feature was the claim by the Sioux for compensation covering that cession of the Black Hills with their gold mines and timber supplies. For several years the Sloux have been attempting to get this claim in shape to push it, but each time the chances appeared to be bright for action there would be discord among the Sloux themselves, and the attempt would fail. Finally, congressional action was taken giving them authority, and requiring them to file with attorney selected by the Government, all their claims under any treaty, the same to be adjudicated, and any amounts due the Indians to be paid to them, with such action closing any and all claims.

GENEVA, Sept. 29 (Special Correspondence)—During the past few days a conference has been held in Geneva of various organizations engaged in the work of famine reliet in Russia. Statements by those in touch with the present situation in the famine-stricken areas showed that the alleviation hoped for from the harvest had only been partially realized and the outlook for the coming winter was very serious.

Dr. Fridtjof Nansen gave a statement of the work which had been accomplished, which had resulted in the saving of millions of lives. His personal estimate of the number who had perished in consequence of the famine placed the figure at over 3,000,000. He could not speak optimistically about the future. Reports to be presented would show that in the areas concerned there was only food for two or three months and the horror of famine may return after Christmas unless outside aid is forthcoming. The news which had appeared in the Russian press in advance of the harvest had been far, too optimistic.

THE PAGE OF THE SEVEN ARTS

Architecture

Our Architect

By BERIAH BOWSER BOUT twenty-five years ago there appeared a little treatise bearing the title, "How to Treat Building Committees, and How Often, a Brochure for the Guidance of Young Architects, With Hints on the Proper Management of Clients." The edition was limited and its circulation restricted. It was even believed by the author and some of his friends that a certain cliché of the older archilooking askance at the revela tions the book contained of some of their most cherished methods, were active in discouraging its first favor ble reception.

This was the almost universal atti tude of the established architects of that time (it evidently being believed that the younger generation was unfitted to receive the arcana of their guild), and they jealously guarded their diathesis and privileges. This position is now very properly regarded as untenable by the more enlightened members of our profession, and efforts in the direction of the younger men, not only toward a better education in the many varied branches of the art, but even in the more practical methods of office practice and ancillary relations, are hailed with enthusiasm.

There is, however, a branch of ar-chitectural education in which there is no chair as yet in any of our universities. Admirable and exhaustive as essential, staggering as a crossword puzzle or a railway time table during the months of daylight saving, the class cards the student nervously fills out, and vainly tries to subject is the relation of the architect to his (or her) client. It must be seen that at the present day the architect and the client speak different languages. There seems to be something in the air of the archi- results of their long hours of labor. tect's office and in the architectural school that robs the student of the power of comprehending the client's point of view. As the neophyte gains in technical knowledge he loses something that is most valuable to his progress in his profession. The understanding of certain essentials is vision of the most brilliant artist. Leonardo, Buonarroti, and Cellini had their troubles with their clients, but they understood them in great degree, and were able, in many cases, to so treat with them as to produce results that were and still are a mar-vel to the world. They fought and quarreled, made up, and fell out again, but, due to the fact that they all spoke the same language, they came nearer to understanding one another than has been the case for many centuries, either before or since

This is a true large manufacturing and commercial story, the senior partner himself enterprises. The need for a large vouching for it. office building was great, the loca-tion available, questions of finance creditable work, the trustees of the enterprise received with favor the suggestions of one of their number that they be employed to carry out men of the men to whom would be in Philadelphia.

Architect and Client

HE humorous column of the newspapers frequently has a line or two on the difficulties of clients with their architects. The article on "Our Architect" brings out the fact that both client and architect are human beings and also that there is something in the point of view of each

The man who is thinking of building often has an idea that he can hire a carpenter for a small job, or a general contractor for a big one, and call in the architect only if he gets into difficulties. He does not realize that the economical method is to study the prospective building on paper before workmen at high wages are under way. He forgets, too, that while the intention of the builder is merely to build what he is directed to, the ideal of the architect is to build appropriately as well as beautifully. The first thought that comes to an architect's mind isdoes this plan fit the requirements, and if not, how can it be made to

Then, on the other hand, the architect often forgets that his work is not merely making pretty pictures, but is also getting them approved so that the work will get started, as is illustrated so entertainingly in the accompanying article.

Time pressed, and the trustees were anxious to see something as quickly as possible, so the junior partner did not spare himself, but studied and traced, and thoroughly follow, there remains a subject of vital importance which is not even hinted at in their curricula. This hausting all the possibilities until the saturated himself in the problem, result seemed the only logical solution of the needs of the case, as indeed it really was. The junior partner innocently thought they would be interested in what he had to show them, and that he would lead them by easy stages to the conclusion he had reached, whereas the senior partner grasped the psychology of the situation at once, and bent his energies toward impressing his clients by his assurance, forcefulness and logic. Beginning in a quiet but measured tone, with care-fully chosen language the salient fully chosen language the salient points of the design were pointed out in an impressive manner. Foundations and qualities of the soil were reverently touched on until his auditors began to feel a personal interest in schist and seepage; and when he pointed out that there would be in-stalled a special drinking fountain with continuous filtered ice water for the directors' personal use a few dry coughs assured the architect that he had them going. With just the right vibrancy to his tones, punctuated with a few well-chosen pauses, he spoke of the golden treasury of the past, whose inspiration had determined the motif of the façade, modestly disclaiming his own share in this portion of the design, and expatiating on the skill and ingenuity displayed by his associate in harmoniously welding the conception of the trustees so that the result before them was in substance the crystallization of their own ideas.

Incidents of like nature happen every day, and such experiences are typical with architects throughout North America. In South America,

Mr. Hutcheson evidently thinks so, for his playing on Saturda was, for the most part, colorless and emotionless. Bach left few indications as to how his pieces should be interpreted, yet we know from contemporary accounts and from his own meager indications, that he must have played them himself with the full emplayed them himself with the full em-ployment of all the means of musical expression of his time. This Mr. Hutcheson failed to perceive, for his playing of the several movements of the English Suite in G minor was unvaried in its monotony.

There was no difference between his Gigue and Gavotte or Courante save the difference in rhythm. Yet these were dance tunes, idealized to be sure, yet for all that as definite in character and as sharply differentiated as a waltz and a polka. And more than this, Bach was not always in serious mood, as Mr. Hutcheson would have us think. The Italian Concerto in its first and last move ments was surely intended to be jolly and gay, not the tiresome, academic piece it seemed to be as played Sat-urday afternoon. Only in the slow

But Mme. Olga Samaron's performance of the Tachalkowski conterio was the outstanding episode.
She is a specialist in fingering of the utmost legerity, delicacy, and breezy seetness. But she did not sacrifice the larger things to the lesser, nor dissipate in cunning filigres display the weightler elements of the composer's lofty purpose and his essential meaning. It was especially because of the high plane to which music of an admittedly noble character was held in the interpretation that the Strauss music grated afterward.

The opening chords were assertively struck, as they should be, and thereafter it was edifying to note with what astuteness this intellectual artist when playing with wood-wind gave her own utterance something of a clarinet or oboc character, and when escorted by the strings purposely allowed the plano to conform, as far as it could, to their quality. The cadenza of the opening movement showed the technical resourcefulness—including a most discreet and sensitive employment of the pedals—and the properties of mind and heart that are associated with the ablest planists.

STEEL INDUSTRY NOW OPERATES AT

Gains 5 Per Cent in Fortnight-Coke, Iron and Finished Steel Prices Decline

NEW YORK, Nov. 6 (Special)— Optimism outweighs pessimism in the steel industry. Operations in general have increased to 75 per cent of capacity compared with 70 per cent a fortnight ago; railroad embargoes are less severe and the huge tonnages of finished steel that were piled at mills a comfortable position financially at awaiting cars are gradually diminishas output grows. Besides transportation conditions the lack of labor is the chief obstacle, the heavier scale labor is the extended $7,500,000 cash on hand and no bank labor. of operations having made the labor loan not due until Oct. 1, 1923. Indishortage more acute. Hints of ancations are that preliminary estimates horizon is the possibility of another interest, taxes, and other charges. coal strike on April 1.

Coke and Pig Iron Price Cuts

Coke production in the Connellsville region for last week was the heaviest so far this year, totaling about 160,000 tons. Coke prices continue to decline, which means that several blast furnaces, now idle, will shortly resume. East the Robesonia, the Alan Wood, the Pulaski, Low Moor, and other furnaces will soon blow in. Furnace coke is plentiful at $8 a ton, Connellsville, with a few standard brands been sold as low as $6.25. These prices erties would call for a charge-off of compare with $12 at the peak this year more than $2,750,000. and $2.75 at the low.

Lower coke has brought about lower which is $7 below the peak; Birming-

The largest iron purchase of the week in the East was that by an east-ern Pennsylvania maker of steel plates, involving 12,000 tons of basic iron at $29 to $29.50 delivered, which is $1 a ton lower. Iron is receding in other districts.

Tariff Effect Evident

The effect of the new tariff on the steel industry is beginning to be felt. principally ferromanganese, on which there is a duty of approximately $33 a ton. Whereas the price previous to the tariff was $67.50, seaboard, the present price is $100 or more. The advance in ferroalloys is contrary to the present market trend, thus plainly showing the tariff's effect.

More finished and semi-finished steel prices have worked lower. The three major items, bars, plates and shapes have fallen from 2%c. to 2c. a pound, Pittsburgh, as previously Pittsburgh, as previously Further declines have taken place in black sheets which are now sold at 3.35c. a pound, as compared with 3.50c. formerly. Sheet bars, from which sheets are made, have changed hands at $39 instead of $40 a ton. Generally speaking steel buying is spering off. Business in railroad freight cars last week was the one freight car orders pending, requiring 450,000 tons of steel, the greatest amount ever in the market at one

Exports Drop Off

Iron and steel exports in September through the large consumption of artificial gas in territories not served by natural gas. This means additional consumption of gas oil in the manufacture of artificial gas.

The total was 140.455 gross tons, as compared with 145,640 tons in August. They were smaller in September than any other month since February, and this was the since February, and this was the since February and the sin ber than any other month since February, and this was the fourth successive monthly reduction. American prices were too high to compete successfully with other countries.

The largest purchase of steel scrap in some time was that by a Pitts-burgh steel company, which took 50,000 tons of heavy melting steel at asphaltum products. $21 a ton, delivered. This is used in place of basic pig iron, which sells around $30. In spite of this large transaction, steel scrap was growing weaker in price all week, the various items declining 50 cents to $1 a ton.

The American Smelting & Refining of Company, the principal lead producer, advanced prices $10 a ton during the week, the most drastic price change of the year. This was divided into two advances of $5 each, one on Wednesday and the other the one on Wednesday and the other the next day. Its new prices were 6.80 cents a pound, East St. Louis, and 7 cents, New York. Lead demand has 7 cents, New York. Lead demand has not been heavy, but supplies are very limited, particularly in the New York district. Other sellers quote from $1 to $5 higher than the leading in transfer. was 4.80 cents a pound.

Tin, Zine and Copper

The tin market has been wild, fluctuating as much as a cent daily whereas a ¼ cent change is considered large normally. At the end of the week Straits tin sold at 37½ cents a pound, the high mark for the year. The world's visible supply of tin at the end of last month was virtually unchanged from that of the month before, being about 23,000 tons. Price manipulation at London aided by buying on the part of American consumers advanced the price.

The feature of zinc has been the heavy exports to Europe for the first time in many months. At least 7000 ufacture of utensils used tons have been sold abroad during the vanced to the American parity. Zinc prices were unchanged during the week, selling at 7.10 cents a pound. East St. Louis. As in lead high prices

COMPANY INCREASES STOCK
Stockholders of the Great Northern Paper Company, at a special meeting held in Millinocket, Me., approved the increase in the authorized stock from $8,300,000 to $25,000,000.

American Beet Sugar Company declared the regular quarterly dividend of $1.50 a. Stock of record Dec. 9. Standard Oil of Indiana declared the regular quarterly dividend of $1 a share, payable Dec. 15 to stock of record Dec. 9. last two weeks, this having been made possible because foreign prices ad-are caused by shortage of stocks rather than urgent demand.

Copper is in the doldrums. Prices have not rallied from the decline from HIGHER CAPACITY metal is still sold at 13% c@13% c a pound, delivered. South American production is increasing, German buy-ing has not revived, American consumers are holding out of the market because of the recent declines and the expectancy of further weakening.

These year, however, and all of next, and two items, together with, say, $3,750, the rate of operations will probably nemain stable. The only cloud on the 000 or more available for depreciation,

As figures are not yet completely audited, directors have not decided how much to charge off for 1922 depreciation. The depreciation charge in 1921 was $1,750,000, plus a reserve of $602,225 for doubtful accounts. In 1920 it was $3,500,000. While operating profits alone for 1922 will more than cover the $3,000,-000 estimated interest and taxes there will probably be a deficit after depreciation unless the latter is smaller than in either 1920 or 1921. nellsville, with a few standard brands to be had at $7 and off-grade coke has on the $93,169,113 book value of prop-

HARVARD AND PRINCETON PREPARING FOR BIG GAME

First of "Big Three" Championship Football Battles Saturday—Several Surprises Sprung Last Week-End

This afternoon finds the coaches of two of the big eastern college football elevens starting their players on their last few days of practice for the first of the "Big Three" championship battles of 1922. This conflict will be between Harvard and Princeton universities in the Harvard Stadium at Boston. The first-string both elevens were not used in last Saturday's games and the practices for these men today, tomorrow and Wednesday are expected to be very hard. For Yale it will be different as the University of Maryland will be met Saturday and the coaches will be priming their first-string players for the game against Princeton on the following Saturday. Other eastern college coaches will be getting ready for more or less important contests.

Last Saturday saw a number of hard-fought games taking place with a number of results which were most unexpected. Of these two stand out prominently. They were the Syracuse-Nebraska contest at Syracuse and the Alabama-Pennsylvania battle in the stadium at Franklin Field, Philadelphia.

There is probably no team in the middle west that has been as highly praised as that representing the University of Nebraska. It has even been claimed that that eleven could defeat Harvard, Yale, and Princeton on successive days. The eleven has made a wonderful showing in the Valley Conference, made the trip to Syracuse a decided favorite to win. Defeat, however, was its lot by a score of 9 to 6. was the hardest-fought game seen in the Archbold Stadium in years. Owing to the conditions of the field, straight football had to be relied upon, a department in which the westerners were highly rated. Both teams were pretty evenly matched, with Syracuse showing a superb attack in the last period, which carried the ball from the middle of the field across Nebraska's goal line for a touchdown and victory. Previous to this, V. C. Thomson '23, Nebraska had picked up a Syracuse fumble at midfield and raced for a touchdown in the third period. The other score by Syracuse was a 35-yard field goal in the opening period.

Pennsylvania was expected to take the measure of University of Ala-bama, but the southerners outplayed the Red and Blue from the very start in a very hard-fought contest, win-ning 9 to 7. Pennsylvania opened the scoring in the second period by scor-ing a touchdown and point afterward. In the third period Alabama scored a touchdown and later added a field goal for the three points that made the victory. It was Pennsylvania's et defeat of the season.

Yale met Brown University and won by the unexpectedly large score of 20 to 0. Before the game it was pre-dicted that the result would be close, but brilliant individual work by N. G. Neidlinger 24 gave Yale three touchars and did not handle the hall any too well. That Yale is developing into Cornell put itself in a good position to lay claim to the mythical eastern onship by defeating Columbia 56 to 0, the biggest score Cornell has White. Capt. E. L. Kaw '23, G. R. Pfann '24, and D. F. Ramsey '24, ran rings around the Columbia players, e the Ithacans' defense was far too strong for Columbia to penetrate.

Lafayette in a hard-fought game, 14 to 13, failure to convert one point after touchdown being responsible for the defeat of the latter. Much interest was taken in this game, because neither college had been defeated in 17 consecutive games and each is tries won by a one-point margin.

Harvard played its second-string follows:

men against University of Florida and won easily 24 to 0. An 89-yard run back of a kickoff by W. H. Churchill '23 at the very start of the game was the feature. Florida could do almos nothing against the Crimson defense. and but for rather indifferent playing times Harvard might easily have bettered its score. Philip Spalding ran the team well from quarterback and J. W. Hammond '25 not only did some fine individual rushing, but did some splendid punting and dropdid fairly well with R. B. Dinsmore '25, R. A. Newby '24 and P. D. Bergen '25 doing the best individual work. The defense, however, was not entirely satisfactory, as Swarthmore twice scored touchdowns. Fumbles by Princeton figured in both these Swarthmore scores, and the Orange and Black will have to handle the ball better in order to win from Harvard and Yale.

Dartmouth College started defeat Boston University with thirdstring players, but the game was less than one period over when Boston scored a touchdown and point after-ward and Coach J. L. Cannell started resorted to by the teams. Two long runs of over half the field, one by each team, for touchdowns, provided spectacular features. Charles Kassal /23, right end for Proviso, caught a forward pass in the second period and ran 55 yards for a touchdown, while Polson,

and ran 50 yards to cross the local goal.

A single and a drop kick by Leadley furnished all the scoring of the third quarter. The McGill line was much stronger than previous in the season, and the winners were unable to make many gains and had to resort to a kicking game in which Leadley had greater distance and the Queen's tack-lers more speed than their opponents. McGill threatened to score ton University defeated the Haverford varsity soccer team here this after-mgde up of Beckwith, Lamb, Gibson, Lippett, Wilson and Alvord came in third with 67 points; Yale's third team, comprising Sturdy, Thorne, Wering, Sandburgh, Milhouse, Gregory and Farnam, scored 95 points.

KANSAS HARRIERS WIN

LAWRENCE, Kan., Nov. 4 (Special)—The University of Kansas cross-country team defeated the Kansas State Agriculture College here today, 26 to 29, James Wilson (23), captain of the Kansas Targely responsible for all over the former was largely responsible for all overwhelmed their opponents. Three overwhelmed their opponents. Three overwhelmed their opponents. Three third with 67 points; Yale's third of the United States Naval Academy, is certainly a great football fan. Drills and practical work at the academy were called off Saturday in honor of Navy's victory over Pennsylvania State College at Washington Friday.

The Neidlinger Brothers, N. G. of Yale and L. K. of Dartmouth, did their bits toward bringing their varsity elevens through to victories last Saturday's overwhelmed their opponents. Three overwhelmed their opponents ov Orange and Black's scores, and T. S. Mutch and J. S. Simons '24 accounted for the other two.

> CROSS-COUNTRY BLANKS OUT Entry blanks have just been sent out by J. W. Waters, director of physical education at the Cambridge Y. M. C. A., for the annual cross-country cham-pionship fun of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island district. The run is to take place at Cambridge Nov. 18. The course is 5.7 miles in length, start-ing opposite the City Hall and finishing opposite the City Hall and finishing at the same place. Teams are to > be composed of three men each, although the various Y's can enter as > many men as they desire. A shield > will be given to the winning team and > individual prizes to the first three runners finishing.

HAMILTON, Ont., Nov. 6—Frank Zuna of Newark, N. J., won the Her-ald 20-mile road race around the bay this morning in 1h. 51m. James Dellow, Toronto, was second and Art Scholes. Gladstone Athletic Club, Toronto, third. The race was run in a rain and the time was considerably slower than the record of 1h. 46m. 15s. set in 1912 by James Duffy.

ZUNA WINS ROAD RACE

AUGUST FAGER WINS TITLE NEW YORK, Nov. 6—August Fager, of the Finnish-American A. C., won the junior Metropolitan District cross-country championship, over the six-mile Van Cor landt Park course, yesterday afternoon in 36m. 48%s. John Phillips, a veteran runner of the Paulist Athletic Club, fin-fished second, 40 yards behind.

BILLIARD MATCH CALLED OFF

Combatting Wet Propaganda

To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor:

I admire the stand you are taking on prohibition. Excepting your paper, I don't know of any section of the press that is presenting the case for prohibition with nearly so much force as the anti-prohibition press is urging its case. The result is there seems to be a preponderance of news items, editorials, magazine articles, lokes and cartoons in opposition to the stand you take. This propaganda has misled a good many people into believing that the general sentiment of the people is expressed through the press, and has produced the argument that prohibition is a minority measure. This propaganda perhaps is crystallized in a recent book "What Prohibition Has Done to America," which has for one of its theses the idea that prohibition has created a general disrespect for law and the Constitution, and that this disrespect is the cause of a spirit of law-lessness which threatens the peace of society.

But the fact is that this propaganda does not represent the sentiment of the country. A well-organized groun.

But the fact is that this propaganda does not represent the sentiment of the country. A well-organized group of men with strong personal interests to serve can produce a vastly greater effect in propaganda than that which proceeds from an unorganized majority composed of people who feel no direct and immediate interest in the issue who have but an ineffectual means of expressing their will and but little conexpressing their will and but little contact with the reactionary phases in a movement which they consider has reached its climax. In so far as prohibition is concerned, the habitual silence of a great many papers expresses popular opinion as fully as the propaganda of other papers, because that silence confirms the belief that prohibition is a closed issue. Of course this attitude on the part of the public is negative, and at present far from commendable. But when the latent force in favor of prohibition is stimulated to action, there will probably remain no question as to whether or not the Nation can enforce its laws. The extent to which the press reflects the opinion of the majority, in a posi-

of public opinion. The papers that supported slavery concentrated upon the single issue and brought all manner of argument to bear upon it, whereas the papers opposed to it found it but one of many matters of interest among a wide range of topics for consideration. So it is now. The anti-prohibition forces are united. The forces that secured prohibition have separated into groups, each of which is laboring for some new and equally progressive measure. Obviously there is need of bringing the forces together again. You deserve a great deal of credit for having assumed the leadership in this difficult undertaking, and for exercising it with ability.

For Movie Censorship To the Editor of The Christian Science

Monitor: It is admitted that the state of the Tit is admitted that the state of the movies was pretty bad, morally, when the demand for state censorship arose. After that demand grew strong, but not before, the movies started to clean up. The industry now professes to have had a change of heart, and to intend keeping straight hereafter. But how long is the improvement likely to last, if the fear of state supervision is withdrawn?

last, if the rear of withdrawn?

If the proposal for state censorship is defeated on election day, we may expect to see the movies lapse back very soon into their old condition, when they were demoralizing our people wholesale.

ART NEWS AND COMMENT

On Sentimentality in Critics and Sentimentality in Art

all the world like some simple-minded stage uncle. Notices of exhibitions written by such well disposed gentlemen are familiar to us. They have a vocabulary of their own composed of such words as "tonality" and "pas-sages of color," pleasant sounding, rather erudite words, sufficiently free from any specific meaning to insure against giving offense to anyone. In their sentimental reviews the stream of art flows on quite sweetly and quite aimlessly. If anything of real significance comes along it is treated with complacent amiability or missed There is, of course, the pitfall on the other side of the road. Let the critic determine to be stern and uncompromising, with a sword that knows no brother, and he is quite likely to find himself to be another Bunyan's Man with the Muckrake, too concerned with his pleasantly disagreeable task of faultfinding to behold achievement even when it is called to his attention. His attitude is sentimentality in the reverse gear, as it were.

+ + + A good neighbor of mine, a lover of music, tells me that there is nothing requires that the artist shall stand more unpleasant than attending a con-cert to sit among a group of critics more unpleasant than attending a concert to sit among a group of critics making it a point of professional etiquette to be alert for every flaw and almost thankful for every error which almost thankful for every error which might provide opportunity for fine "critical" writing. That is one ex-"critical" writing. That is one ex-ample. I can think of another erring vision just as tears may blur the eyes. in the other direction.

In a community not a thousand miles from New York the art critics and the of how sentimental associations may artists are all good fellows together. the high central space, the Meade Me-morial caught the light from the upper windows. It was as if a congregation had filed into a church. Now and then a whisper escaped, and answering whispers murmured here and there years of labor. How much would be understood? It was a severe test of

The path of the critic is not an easy one. There are pitfalls on either side. Let him resolve to be sympathetic and he is apt to find him self puttering about giving a few well-chosen words and a pat on the back to every piece of art, good or bad, for all the world like some simple-minded who had given their attention to flowers and children. And practically flowers and children. And practically all of them were artistically weak. Did the weakness of the exhibit lie in that, then—too many flowers and children? Of course paintings of children and flowers need not be weak. But here, painted by the women painters, they undoubtedly were, and it would seem that the reason is that the attitude of the artists Did the weakness of the exhibit lie in had been too sentimental.

Let us think about this a little. It is not improbable that a woman painter turns unconsciously to the child as a subject, not because he is an especially artistic subject, but be cause of that feeling which we call maternal. It may well be, too, that in choosing flowers she has been unconsciously responding to the love of fair blossoms and gardens which women have always had. The urge in each case is really sentimental rather than strictly artistic.

Now as agreeable as sentimentality may be in human experience it seems to have rather an unfortunate influ-ence on the artist's point of view. It would seem that true appreciation

There was a hush that afternoon in the Grafly studio. True to his belief in the public, the sculptor had respected the integrity of their interest. Art was the sole attraction. Little boys who yesterday has clubbed apples from the sculptor's trees, tiptoed, hat in hand, around the memorial. To them, it was a solemn rite. A veteran of the Civil War sat gazing at the figure of his General. Tears streamed silently from his eyes. He sat there a long time, then rose, and quietly slipped out into the garden. To him, it was a silent tribute.

In Gloucester there are many stone-cutters, Americans, Swedes, Finns,

Italians. They met that afternoon in the Grafly studio. Their interest was, perhaps, more technically apprecia-tive. One had carved monuments for a local firm. He found special interest in the blue prints for the final architectural setting, and in the exact quality of the stone to be used. He ap-

Charles Grafly and His Model for the Figures of the Meade Memorial, Which Is to Be Erected in Washington, B. C.

The first emotional appeal swept there came a period of questioning, when thought grappled with the problems confronting it.

Of what was the model fashioned? Of wax. Perhaps the answer would prove satisfying, or perhaps thought would use it merely as fuel to the flame. "When will you glaze and bake it." asked one, attacking the problem of permanence. Or, "Did you paint it that color?" Such questions might amuse the initiated, but each was is an opportunity to bridge the gap between the man who knows and the man who seeks knowledge.

Many of those men and women who came that day to see the Meade Me-morial, would "live all winter on the afternoon," as one of their number phrased it. It is that very yearning for the æsthetic, that reaching out for satisfaction which the artists of the world are created to gratify. The public has a birthright to beauty. Charles Grafly's Meade Memorial what does it matter if it sees the emblem on the general's buttons, or if it remarks upon trivialities—upon the nose, the mouth, the hair? It has the monument, and not one of them found beauty: a door has opened, refound anything objectionable in the group. Neither did their parents. The idea had never occurred to them, and dream of those things as he sits by his kitchen stove.

Art is not a club for the intiated—
a secret cult of private views, where a picked group of individuals may enlarge their vocabularies of mutual adoration. Art belongs to the people; to "The Public"—intangible, formidable, vast-a composite, and conse quently too subtle, too varied for pigeon hole or card index. The public cannot be photographed. It defies the camera. No one can see it, reason with it, meet it face to face. It eludes analysis, and those who rely upon the the world outside himself.

"What the public wants" is frequently the slogan of the producer, be he manufacturer or artist, but the phrase is misleading. It should read, are to be saved.
"What I think the public wants," for The Parliament will be asked to vote artist may rail at the public, and the public at the artist, yet each is continually seeking a mutual point of contact. Perhaps the individual—or yards thick, and in which there is the artist—is prone to forget that when he steps forth from his own little field of endeavor, he automatically becomes a part of the public he fails to understand. If he makes a purchase, he is one of the many for whom closely connected with the history of clo lass, as the full force of the monument broken in upon her. In her colloquial language she had voiced an appreciation equal to that of the most cultivated. What it lacked in words it expressed in feeling. It was a compliment.

The first emotional appeal swept limits of another's vision the public is necessarily that group of people with whom he comes in active contact—a commission, a club, an organization, an individual. There is a clash of fleas, and, in the spess of compromise so often required when the creative imagination is forced within the limits of another's vision the artist. past the intellect. But to those who limits of another's vision, the artist is apt to confuse the group of individ-uab with the mass. He rails at "the public" when, in reality, he means to rail at a fractional part of their number-as unrepresentative of the mass his own creation his imagination fails him, and it does not occur to him that his failure is similar to that of the men

The approach to beauty is through individual experience. Its appeal may come through shapely features, comely figure, or minute design, in a blue print, a photograph, or a plaster cast. At times, a memorial is too vast, too abstract for one to comprehend its message. But there are steps by white plaques of fish upon the studio wall. With those they were familiar. It was a human bond. The sculptor knew fish, even as they knew them. And back they would come to the me-morial, warmed by the intimacy of a discovered relationship. Thus do little things build toward mutual appre-ciation. The public and the artist are fellow beings. They vary only in ex-perience. Somewhere within them lies the possibility of communication. It may be trivial—an absurdity—a button on a general's uniform! But that very button may prove the open sesame to a greater understanding. The crowd still gathered, gathered again. Tomorrow each would return to his own share of the day's work. And of those people, intent, tense, vibrating—what could a photograph reveal?

And one thinks of plans, and of endless contractors, all preliminaries to the subtle business of living. After the subtle business of living. After all, there is little poetry in a brandnew edifice. Where are the human associations, the warm, intimate giveand-take of existence? From blueprints, and from the bench of the

His early years were spent in many lands. Europe he has known intimately, and South America is a dim fairy tale of fleeting impressions. Then came the schools of architecture, Petrograd, Paris—and the final triumph of the artist over the drafts-man. Such has been the experience of William Walcot, R. E., whose imagina-tive etchings were recently put on view in the Staton Art Galleries, Phila-

One wonders how the artist in the architect can tie himself down to the practical, contractor-like mechanism of plans. But the hod carrier disappeared from Walcot's scheme of things. He might be necessary for actual construction, but not for art, and Walcot, above all, is an artist—a negitiar atches.

Portraiture is not always confined to the revelation of human character. That which man touches acquires an intimacy which renders it, in itself, individual. The room—the very corner in which one has rested with a well-loved book reveals the character of the occupant. It is the type of room in which one might delight in the glow of the evening lamp, or the gay, bright room, in which no one could long remain alone. Aspirations, like faint whispers in forgotten corners linger about hall or library. Or there is dignity, defiance, perhaps, in the bold front of, a one-time noble dwelling.

Walcot is now turning to those in the interpretations. In his newly published series, "The Arteries of Great Britain," he has drawn portraits of modern waterways. The people and the architecture are least closely welded. In fact, the people scarcely enter into the interpretation. It is rather a union of architecture and commerce—impersonal, yet dreamlike. One feels the charm of misty arches in "The Forth," or the dual character of "The Thames," with its black industry and its white city. Hivers, perhaps, smile, in the course of their progress to the sea. "The Mersey" flows in pleasant places, past the magic of towered cities, while "The Tyne" seems a sudden, arrested commonplace, a busy industrial waterway with his books. les, while "The Tyne" seems a sudden, arrested commonplace, a busy industrial waterway with big boats and dominant shipping. Strindberg and Edvard Brandes

Translated for The Christian Science Monitor

WITH the appearance of "The 1884 "Politiken" was started, and here Red Room," in 1879, Strindberg Brandes had an avenue through which became a Scandinavian celeb-The representatives of literary than ever for the ideas of the newer hastened to enroll him in their bat-tling ranks. He received letters of homage from Edvard Brandes and some of Strindberg's earlier works, homage from Edvard Brandes and some of which had now appeared in While no Stockholm publisher had Alexander Kielland and very soon Danish translation. The first article dared to bring out the new drama, after he entered into correspondence with Biörnstierne Biörnson and Jonas Lie. Of all these connections his relations with Edvard Brandes proved the most significant for Strindberg.

It is Edvard—not Georg Brandes— who has the honor of having introduced Strindberg to Denmark. In the eighties he wrote a series of very clever criticisms about his writings, in fact, the first important criticisms written by anyone, and he did even more; he secured a Danish publisher for a long list of Strindberg's works. There rests in the archives of the Swedish Authors Society/a mass of letters written by Brandes to Strindberg which speak eloquently of this early championship of the great Swedish mystic by the Danish playwright and critic. + + +

The first of these Brandes letters is dated July 21, 1880. Brandes writes that he has been so impressed by "The Red Room" that he finds it entirely natural to thank the author, although the latter is almost unknown to him. In the next letter he speaks in even more enthusiastic terms of Strind-berg's talent: "You are the one to put new life into Swedish literature, the born leader of the new era. Your power and will to do is no less strong than a Björnson's or an Ibsen's; your range and development far greater, and fore long your name will be spoken alongside the foremost in Scandinavian literature. I don't think you know yourself, begging your pardon, how great a talent you possess, and I have an immense desire to proclaim it to all the world."

The first period of the friendly relations between Strindberg and Brandes, however, ended of a sudden. In a letter dating from the summer of 1882, Strindberg gives evidence of anti-Semitic reflections, with the added information that in his satire on society, "The New Kingdom," he had in mind tree ing of the Swedish Jews in a satirical vein. Brandes took this news much to heart. "As unwilling as I am to say it," he wrote Strindberg, "I hardly expect anything good from your new novel; nothing good as regards our friendship, or our common ideals. . . . The blow you intend to strike against the Swedish Jews will fall on me and on every Jew, whether he is a believer or not. Live cell and guard tenderly your great Jacobein.... The renewed relationship and ensuing correspondence became of no slight importance to the subsequent career of August Strindberg. On the invitation of Brandes he began to write in "Politiken." During the next years this newspaper became his mouthpiece in Scandinavia. It was in the columns of "Politiken" that his "Fables" made their first appearance, and his "Among French Peasants" was run in a series of eight articles in the same publication. . . .

+ + + Brandes secured a Danish publisher for Strindberg in the person of P. G. Philipsen. The first book published was "Real Utoplas," in 1885, under the Danish title of "Isbrud" (ice-breaking). Brandes was quite satisfied with the reception of the book. "The fiasco attending the experimental theater again led to a severing toy. Brightly painted and with the second control of the book. "You can't realize," he wrote Strind-berg, "what good service 'Isbrud' is doing in this country; both farmers and city people are reading the book." About the same time "The Red Room' was running serially in "Politiken," and the next year it appeared in book form with Philipsen as publisher.

Brandes is now busying himself seeing to it that "The Bondwoman's Son," which was published in the spring of 1886, should come out in a Danish edition.

"Yesterday," writes Brandes under date of June 9, "I read the book and today I got Philipsen to accept it for publication here. I congratulate you from my innermost heart on account of such a book. It is very significant, and both useful, profound and honest." In the same year Brandes makes arrangement for a Danish edition in one volume of Strindberg's "Master Olof," "The Secret of the Guild" and "Sir Bengt's Lady." * * *

There was that in Edvard Brandes' interest in Strindberg which revealed not only a proper valuation of the Swedish writer's literary position, but a most unselfish concern for his economic needs as well. When Strindberg declared that henceforth he would look down upon belles lettres and devote himself to journalism, Brandes hastens to tell him in the most positive terms that he must stick to his own line. Polite literature, as he expresses it, is after his opinion just as good a means for doing propaganda as journalism.

"Write a big novel," he advises Strindberg, "a mature 'Red Room,' and you will get further with that with all the economic articles that the world produces. Besides, you will earn several thousands. How is it possible that one can squander so beautiful talent as yours! . . . Write a novel, write a drama. Inject

Religion and Business

PAUL, the philosopher of primitive of business, the plous worker, the Christianity, sent out many good notes on business. In his epistic to Titus, for example, he wrote, "Let our's [our people] also learn to maintain good works for necessary uses, that they be not unfruitful." Paul evidently believed that Christians should be active in the work of supplying human needs, and be good merchants, mechanics, hwyers, et ceters.

Many people have long thought that Many people have long thought that employ their days in gainful pursuits, religion cannot be worked with business; therefore, it is indeed a surprise new-found interests, which give zest to them to discover that Christian to existence. PERHAPS it is just as well that Great Britain is going to follow up the elections in the United States with one of its own eight days later. Under ordinary conditions some very biting British satire upon the state of politics in the Republic might be expected-and deserved. For how can a foreigner be expected to get any intelligent idea of party divisions when he views the most notorious Democratic candidate for the Senate-Reed of Missouri-and the most widely famous Republican candidate-Lodge of Massachusetts-seeking election upon identically the same platform, namely irreconcilable hostility to the League of Nations. And it is not on questions of foreign relations alone that party disintegration is apparent. In New Jersey Republicans are supporting Senator Frelinghuysen because he is dry; in Wisconsin and California they rally about La Follette and Hiram Johnson because they are emphatically wet. In Iowa Republicans are in revolt against the party nominee for the Senate, Brookhart, because of his alleged radical tendencies; but in North Dakota that party swallows the Nonpartisan League candidate, Frazier, lock, stock and barrel. In Nebraska, Senator Hitchcock is thought to be in peril because of devotion to Woodrow, Wilson, his party's former chief, but in Indiana Republicans rejected their leader's friend for the senatorial nomination and put forward Beveridge, who cannot be classed with Harding's friends.

In brief, neither on the vital issue of prohibition, nor yet upon any definite idea of foreign policy is either party united or issue joined between the two. National leadership is as lacking to one as to the other. The term Republican or Democratic is scarcely understandable unless accompanied by some adjective like "wet," "progressive," or "Wilson."

· All of which indicates a parlous state in American politics. But what of the contest in Britain? How many kinds of Conservatives are there? Of Liberals? Is Labor a unit? Is the fight on THE coalition to wind up by the establishment of A coalition? Was Lloyd George forced out for any particular reason except that a different set of politicians wanted jobs? Are the parties there more coherent in their acceptance of fundamentals, or less vague in their points at issue than in the United States?

The chaotic state of politics in these two great nations is curiously parallel. What has caused it? What is the insidious weakness in the electorates of the two greatest self-governing nations of the world's history that makes them thus unable to present the very basic necessaries of democratic government-issues frankly stated and parties and candidates unequivocally identified each with the body of political convictions upon which the voters are asked to pass judgment?

THE Dominion Alliance, -Ontario branch, has lately published a booklet of information containing some striking facts about the improvement of conditions in the Province under prohibition. Since the bars and liquor shops were sands of farms not more than closed for the last time, in September, 1016, there has been a decided decrease in drunkenness and related crime. During the same period there is most encouraging evidence of progress in educational activities, social amenities, and conditions under which the business of the community is carried on.

Retailers and wholesalers report a larger proportion of cash trade and a greater demand for the better class of goods. Industry has benefited under prohibition by increased regularity, punctuality and efficiency of workers. Rent and taxes are more promptly paid, savings bank deposits have increased. Former opponents have been converted to prohibition by the practical evidence of the operation of the law. Among prominent members of the Toronto Board of Trade who expressed themselves strongly in favor of prohibition recently, one said:

Although I did not in any way assist in the obtaining of prohibition for this city, and was, in fact, rather opposed to the idea, my observations of the beneficial effects of it in this city have completely converted me to become an ardent supporter of the movement.

The evidence of improvement is most notable in the . cities. There had been a steady elimination of the liquor trade from the smaller towns and country districts before the Province went completely dry in 1916. When the Ontario Temperance Act came into force, the city of Toronto took the lead as the largest city in the world under prohibition. This year at the Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto, which had a paid attendance of 1.373,000 people, there was but one arrest for drunkenness. In 1914, Toronto had a population of 470,144 and the police court figures during the year included 14,247 cases of drunkenness. In 1917, after one year of prohibition, the "drunks" were reduced to 4554. For the year 1921, with a population of 522,666, the police court records included 4727 "drunks."

The most striking effect of prohibition, it is stated, is found in the school statistics. There has been an encouraging increase in registration and the percentage of attendance to registration has gone up. The gross attendance of primary and high schools has increased, per 1000 of population, from 118 in 1914 to 175 in 1921.

Ontario temperance workers see the most hopeful gain to the rising generation, growing up without being subject to the alcoholic taint, and without the temptation to dissipation in their environment. The claim is borne out by the evidence, after six years dry, that young Ontario is growing up "cleaner, purer, stronger, finer, and better in every way.'

THOSE who are inclined to regard resentfully the enactment and enforcement of laws designed to prohibit and punish certain reprehensible practices not regarded as constituting crimes under the common law, and not strictly inhibited by the moral law, should consider, in the light of history and experience, the direct and controlling reasons for such enactments. Isolated and spasmodic disregard of the rights of society, or the masses if that name is preferred, seldom if ever prompts the people, through their legislatures, to proscribe or penalize specific acts. It is only when the perpetration of such acts or practices becomes a menace to the well-being, safety, or prosperity of society that the public conscience is aroused in an effort to prevent them. It is conceivable that if only two, or a hundred, or a thousand men persisted in the practice of carrying concealed weapons, there would be no recognized emergency making necessary the enactment and enforcement of laws forbidding such a practice.

An authorized spokesman for the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, with headquarters in New York, has taken exceptions to an editorial in this paper on "A Fundamental of Prohibition," saying that it begs the question which it purports to discuss. He insists that the rights of the individual have been invaded because of the declared intent of the Volstead Law to "prevent the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage." That is the intent, and the sole intent of the law, as it also is of the fundamental enactment the nullification of which the society mentioned professedly seeks. But there is nothing in the law which prohibits or punishes that use. The inhibition is against the manufacture or traffic in the proscribed beverages as such, just as the law to which reference has been made prohibits, in some of the states, and particularly in New York, the display and traffic in certain kinds of firearms. The abuse of the privilege to carry dangerous weapons, the realization, based upon bitter experience, that their possession incites to crime, just as the tardy realization that the use of intoxicants induces crime, poverty, suffering, and disgrace have aroused those who can see clearly, anselfishly, and compassionately to a realization of their responsibilities.

The volunteer critic says, and his words are quoted verbatim: "Firearms are dangerous to the general public when carelessly or recklessly used by an individual. By no possible stretch of the imagination could any reasonable person say that similar use of intoxicating liquors by an individual created a similar danger. The abuse of intoxicating liquor as a beverage unquestionably injures the individual so using it; but it is not the function of a free government to act as a parent to its citizens." Such admissions, constituting the major premise of the statement quoted, defeat the conclusion which the critic seeks to draw. The answer is found in the records of the criminal courts, in asylums for the insane, in almshouses, in wrecked homes, and in the trail of the bootleggers and violators of the law which a prudent and not a "parental" Nation passed in the hope that men and women would find in it that defense and protection against a common enemy which their own strength did not supply.

WITHIN a radius of 10 miles from the center of New York City there are about 7,000,000 people who should

eat fresh fruit daily. On thou-100 miles from this great population there are large quantities of apples, pears, peaches, and other fruits that will be ungathered from a lack of a profitable market. Somehow the faw of supply and demand does not function efficiently. The consumers of the cities would gladly use more fruit if it were furnished at reasonable prices. The farmers are anxious to dispose of their orchard production. What stands between producer and consumer is the high cost of distribution-freight rates, commission charges and retail dealer's profits. As in all other American industries, production is abundant, but consuming power at the prices that the public must pay, is insufficient. The result is to make fruit-growing unprofitable, while minimizing the consumption of a wholesome food. The absurdity of these conditions has long been realized, and various plans have been suggested for cutting down distributive costs. Co-operative marketing associations have been tried on a small scale, with only partial success. It would seem that the American farmer is still of the individualist school, and has not yet learned to associate with his neighbors in disposing of his crops to the best advantage. In some lines, such as dairy farming, strong organizations have been formed that have secured better terms for the producers. In California the associated citrus fruit-growers have successfully managed the shipment and sale of immense quantities of their product, and in some other regions of the United States the co-operative idea is slowly taking root. The city buyer, too, is an individualist, preferring to buy nonperishable fruits in small quantities from the neighborhood stores, instead of taking package lots at lower priçes. There would seem to be a great opportunity for effective educational work among both producers and consumers, in which state agricultural boards, farm organizations, and the rural and city press, should combine to show the advantages of a more direct distributive system, that would encourage buying in larger quantities, and eliminate some of the excessive costs incident to present methods. The fixed charges, including the high rents of shops, of the thousands of small fruit and vegetable stores, seem to make necessary the great difference between the return to the farmer and the retail price, and no other remedy appears to be possible than some arrangement by which there can be a closer relation between consumer and producer.

tional agencies, the American-Scandinavian Foundation has reason to be gratified by what the report of the first ten years contains with respect to the particular countries about which the foundation concerns itself. The United States, of course, always has been on the most friendly terms with Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, but diplomatic relations do not seem to touch the masses in the same way as do private enterprises, and a study of the 1921 report of the American-Scandinavian Foundation is a revelation with regard to an intellectual intercourse that has bridged the Atlantic, the North Sea, and the Baltic.

As chairman of the executive committee of the foundation, Hamilton Holt has been untiring in his efforts to make the purpose of this institution better known in the United States. The most vital and human feature of the program initiated ten years ago is interchange of students between American and Scandinavian universities. At first it was possible to appoint only six traveling fellows annually and to grant to each $750, but the tenth year found in full operation a formal interchange of forty fellows receiving stipends of at least $1000 each, while eighteen other students, Americans, Danes, Norwegians, and Swedes, were designated special scholars and honorary fellows, the scholars receiving stipends ranging from $200 to $1000.

Resigning as secretary of the foundation and editor of the American-Scandinavian Review at the completion of his ninth year of service, Dr. Henry Goddard Leach nevertheless retains his interest in the work through his election to the board of trustees. It is almost needless to say that Dr. Leach has been a main prop of this unique organization almost from its start, and that but for his persistent labors no such record could have been obtained. Miss Hanna Astrup Larsen, literary editor of the Review since the publication of the first number, is now the literary secretary of the foundation and editor of the American-Scandinavian Review. James Creese, assistant-secretary, with authority to act as secretary in the absence of a secretary, is also a most valuable member of this

The value of the quiet work accomplished by any company of men and women who earnestly strive to make the different nations better acquainted with each other, so as to avoid the pitfalls that frequently produce distrust and war, can hardly be overestimated. In the case of the American-Scandinavian Foundation the results achieved after ten years of labor speak for themselves. In the Scandinavian countries especially, the fraternal idea underlying the foundation's work has struck deep foot, and with men like Hamilton Holt forging dauntlessly ahead as international spokesman, a strong following is assured. Denmark, Norway, and Sweden have much to give and also much to learn from this steady confact with American ideas and ideals, and America will profit likewise.

A BRITISH art professor has just been warning British Labor of its mistake in leaving art out of its program.

Art and Labor

Labor might retort that the criticism could as sensibly be turned the other way round,--that art has not been over keen to recognize Labor. This is in a measure true of Labor as a subject of art. The laborer had no place among the models of Greek sculpture, he was never a rival to the subjects of the medieval painter, he did not fit into the luxurious, flamboyant flights of the Renaissance. Only here and there in the earlier history of art, in an Assyrian bas-relief, perhaps, or a primitive product, or the background to a picture, was he allowed any part in the scheme of the universe. It was left for the modern artist to discover the picturesqueness of work and the dignity of the worker, to show that the body of the stevedore or the puddler in action can be as beautiful as that of the wrestler or the rider, that factory chimneys can become Campanili seen through the veil of their own smoke, that industry no less than royalty has its palaces.

But, in any case, to say that Labor is ignored by art is not quite the same as to say that art is ignored by Labor. Art is independent, self-centered, and could get along without the rest of the world far better than the rest of the world could get along without it, for art is of the very coloring and beauty of existence. Labor that would free itself of art in all its forms and manifestations would be a sadly sordid and dull affair, and this holds good not only of Labor in the limited sense given to the word by the trade-unions, but in the wider interpretation which includes all that is done by any and all of those who get their bread by the sweat of their brow.

The average member of a trade-union would probably not admit any relation between art and the only work he calls labor, and he does not realize how great may be his loss if he per ists in drawing a hard and fast line between them. But there are exceptions. Some laborers individually love and cultivate the art that Labor as a body has no use for save in Russia, where a Labor Government has not been slow to learn how powerful an aid art can prove in pacifying the proletariat. Theater and opera there have had state patronage, painting is not suppressed. poetry is encouraged. But drama, music, painting, and poetry are accepted only when they are in accord with communistic ideals and fundamentals, though how they are to be brought into accord the most ardent Bolshevik might have difficulty in explaining, while to impose conditions upon art is to stultify it, and in the end crush it out altogether. Free art and free labor would not make an impossible combination and Labor, if for an interval it would forget its wrong to remember the rights of art, might find itself much nearer the industrial millennium to which it aspires,

Editorial Notes

A SOMEWHAT anomalous state of affairs has recently come to light as one of the side issues of the attempt to remake the map of Europe. With the relinquishment of Austro-Hungarian and German territory to Italy, Rumania, Jugoslavia, and Tzechoslovakia, immigrants in the United States from the sections in question, who, at the close of the war, had the status of German or Austro-Hungarian subjects, automatically became by the terms of the peace treaties citizens of one of the enlarged or newly created countries, unless within two years they signified their desire to regain their old citizenship, and also provided they fulfilled such other requirements of citizenship as might be decided upon by their adopted country. Tzechoslovakia, for example, announced that registration at one of its consulates was necessary to assure status as a Tzechoslovak. It now appears that numbers of immigrants from territory which was ceded to Tzechoslovakia, who wish to visit their old homes, find it impossible to get passports, due to their failure to take steps either to regain their old or to claim their new citizenship. Many of them have declared their intention of becoming American citizens, but, until naturalization is completed, they are actually citizens of no country.

Some folk who would uncompromisingly condemn as impracticable, un-American, and even intolerable any censorship of books or the press are half in favor of such a move in the case of motion pictures. Feeling, that is to say, that there is a great need for some check on the stream of unsatisfactory photoplays, they seize upon this allegedly corrective measure believing that therein is to be found what they are looking for. The censorship weapon is, however, a dangerous one. It is true that certain undesirable féatures of the films could be eliminated, but so much of what is undesirable is entirely beyond the reach of any possible censoring that the establishment of such an imagined reform is extremely liable to do niore harm than good by making people believe that the evil has been corrected when such is not the case. In the last analysis, it must be remembered that putting an arbitrary power into the hands of one man, whether it be in the censoring of motion pictures or in other widely different activities, is often an exceedingly dangerous procedure, and one that is extremely liable to be grossly abused.

REALLY it does not need an economic expert to appreciate that Raymond Poincaré was justified when he declared that one might as well try to quadrate a circle as to solve Europe's economic problem without the help of the United States. The trouble is that, while the leader in Europe are now seeking to establish a formula that the United States will accept, they are by no means in the least degree certain what kind of a proposal America wants. Such a vague declaration as that America wants. Such a vague declaration as that America waiting for Europe to put its house in order is in reality futile, because that is just what Europe needs America to help it to do. One thing is certain, practically any proposal from the United States, provided only that it were within the bounds of reason, would command assent. The main question, which is looming large, is Will the United States act before the apparently inevitable crush comes?

EFFORTS to minimize the importance of the Prohibition Referendum which is to come before the voters of Massachusetts tomorrow constitute just another of the tricks being employed by the wet forces of the State to secure a negative majority on that occasion. Hence, all such statements as "the real issue involved is " followed by an explanation that it is a question of taxes, or this, that, or the other thing should be looked at askance. All such statements, as a matter of fact, are contradicted unequivocally by large advertisements which declare:

To Defeat the Volstead Law VOTE NO On Referendum Question No. 4

This tells in a few words the real animus of those who want to see a negative vote registered on Referendum No. 4.

PROF. STEPHEN LEACOCK, who is a humorist most of the time though a teacher of political economy at McGill University, says that prohibition is a failure because in Quebec, where there is no prohibition "wines are sold under our system at a price that would make your mouth water only 40 cents a quart. Whisky is handled by Government clerks who have no inducement to sell you poor stuff." Apparently the professor thinks prohibition a failure because it does not make wine cheap and whisky pure. We are reminded of the apt phrase of an English reviewer estimating one of the professor's books on political economy. "It is not quite apparent," said he, "whether this book contains the jests of an economist, or the economics of a jester."

Wisconsin is setting an example to the other states of the Union in the matter of broadcasting market reports to farmers, the State Department of Markets having decided to attempt to establish a wireless receiving outfit in every Wisconsin farm home. A master wireless marketreport broadcasting station is being erected at Waupaca, and when this station is completed early in December every farmer in Wisconsin will be able to get reliable Government market reports by wireless telephone and telegraph within a few minutes after prices are quoted in the large markets of the country. As a public activity in the interest of the farmers this may take first place.

4 4 4 RELATIVE to the question of picketing by strikers in their attempt to prevent others from doing the work which their action in striking has left undone, it is interesting to recall that-Magna Charta, signed on June 15, 1215, refers to the individual who goes out to work for his livelihood in these words:

No man shall go against him, nor molest him, nor oppress him, nor make him afraid. Has the world gone backward since 1215?

IT HAS been said that the only nation for which the Turk has a lasting affection is extermination. Doubtless this is the reason why he is himself an abomination.
